Notes 3

What is a graphical user interface (GUI)?

A GUI is a graphical interface that makes it easier for humans to interact with a computer system.

What is a desktop evironment?

Is a software bundle that provides a fully set up GUI to the user.

What is a command line interface (CLI)?

A command line interface is the opposite of a GUI, and enables the user to interface with a computer system through entered text-based commands.

What is a virtual console?

A virtual Console is what you use to run and manage a VM.

What is a terminal emulator?

A program that lets you interact with an OS through text based commands.

What is Bash?

A CLI shell and scripting language used for Unix or Unix-like OS's.

What is a shell prompt?

A shell prompt is a customizable place to enter text based commands to a computer system.

- Clear - Clears the terminal window of previous commands.
- Echo - A print command for the terminal, used to display strings.
- date - a command to display the system date and time.
- free - a command to check free space in memory.
- uname - a command to display system information
- history - a command to display the shell history.
- man - the command to display the manual for various other commands.
- tldr - a command to display simplified manuals
- hostname - displays the version of DE being utilized.
- df - displays a specific files size

- du - is the command to display disk usage
- figlet - is a command to display entered text as ASCII art.